HE proprietor and the genera manager of Copeland's Dry Goods Emporium were in consultation. There was a third party to the consultation, a dapper little bald-headed gentleman who, an hour before, had introduced himself as E. Dodge, the inventor of a new perfum called The Essence of Advertisement, which article he sought to introduce into a few select stores in San Fran-

The proprietor and the general man ager had heard the little inventor out without showing him out. Indeed, they had listened with growing interest to his dissertation on the value o The Essence of Advertisement, and had agreed to order a heavy consignment of the perfume, should the sam ple prove a complete success

The little inventor-demonstrator was all confidence. Uncorking a quart bottle of the essence, he went through the tle of the essence, he went through the store and sprinkled the counters with a slight quantity of the stuff. He also dashed some upon the threshold of the emporium doors and against the large plate-glass windows without, as well as on the sidewalk liself, for, strange to say, the essence was not to be sold over the counter but was to be sprinkled about the bazaer. sprinkled about the bazaar.

The fluid was as coloriess as water, as fragrant as white violets, and soon the emporium was pervaded with its delicious, penetrating odor.

"You see, gentlemen," explained the little demonstrator, "all matter is spirit and all spirit is matter. Or, in other words, all things both physical and spiritual are one in their final element, and matter can be changed into spirit and spirit into matter. ronage?

A letter was hastily written to E. Dodge, laying facts before him asking for advice. Two weeks later the advice came. It was as follows:

Martin Copeland, Proprietor Copeland's Dry Goods Emporium.

Dear Sir: The reason why patrons, once having purchased at your store, rarely return is to be explained by the fact that you are using the Essence of Advertisement in too pure a state. I send you herewith a recipe for its dilution; have a druggist attend to the matter at once. There is such a thing as overadvertising. When your customers breathe the Essence in too pure a state, they are incited topure a state, they are incited to the perfume they repent their heavy purchases, and, out of chagrin, do not return. The remedy is to dilute the Essence according to the recipe inclosed, and while your sales will fall off somewhat, they will show a much healthier state.

Very truly,

E. DODGE.

Very truly, E. DODGE,

On receipt of this letter of advice. the general manager immediately sent out a clerk with a quart of The Es-sence of Advertisement, instructing him to have the stuff diluted according to directions at the nearest drug-gist. Slipping on an orange peel be-fore a rival store, the clerk split the vial, and the contents ran over the sidewalk. Immediately all the passersby in that neighborhood began to pour ny in that neighborhood began to pour into the rival store, and the unprecedented sales of that house, while the odor of the perfume lasted, astounded and mystified the proprietor. This unfortunate clerk was immediately discharged, and another was sent out with a second bottle of the es-

Copeland's Dry Goods Emporium now became enviously noted for the amazing amount of steady business that it was doing, and for the exquis ite violet fragrance that haunted its shelves and counters, and other stores, hoping thereby to attract custom, began to imitate the latter novelty. But the fragrance they used was merely the ordinary violet perfume of com-merce and not the marvelous Essence of Advertisement, and of course these mitators had their cost and labor for othing. Six months passed, and his stock of essence growing alarmingly low, Cope-land wrote to the headquarters of E. Dodge in New York city for a ten-thousand-dollar consignment of the precder returned, the envelope thereof bearing the official stamp, Party Dead.

"Good heavens!" exclaimed the alarmed proprietor, "Dodge is dead, and perhaps his secret has died with And so it proved. How to See the Real Burma.

Yet Burma is a country of sur-passing interest, and once outside the Rangoon, Mandalay and Prome (none of which is typically Burmese), one may journey at will among a simple, happy, kindly people, still very young and wholly unspoiled by contact with the West. It is a country of mystery, where nats (nature spirits) still dwell tribes, widely diverse in customs and physical characteristics, living as they lived 1,000 years ago; tribes among which the Burmese are only one, but happened to be in the ascendant at the moment of England's conquest of

At Mandalay begins a journey into the country of the hill tribes, at war with each other till within a few years. It is said that surreptitious "head-hunting" has not even now entirely ceased among the wilder tribes. From Mandalay the journey up the river should by all means, be made by cargo steamer.

Not only does the cargo boat stop at tiny villages and at many points where one sees no signs of a village, but she tows, lashed alongside, a barge nearly as large as herself. This barge and the great after-deck of the steamer form one big "department"

They come from the Shan tive in form and feature; eaters of lizards, of beetles, of snakes—in fact, of everything except human fiesh, which is forbidden.

Here are (so-called) white Karens, where a comprehensive service is established. For such a journey only a single servant is necessary, as in India or Ceylon.

For a more extended journey, involving the necessity of leaving the waterways, some provision must be made. A bedding outfit will be needed, as well as cooking utensils and

A Scotchman's Conscience The purchasing agent of a big job-bing concern in San Francisco is a Scotchman. He knew he dare not offer the Scot a commission; likewise a gift of money, he figured, would be regarded as an insuit. He had an inspiration. The Scot, he noticed, constantly smoked cigars. So the salesman excused himself for a minute, slipped out to a cigar store and bought a box containing fifty of the finest Havanas the tobacconist carried in stock. The price for the fifty was fifteen deliars. He brought the box back under his arm and asked the purchasing agent

He was sitting in a courtroom one day when a young and struggling member of the local bar, who was not especially renowned for mental brilliancy, undertook to read a petition in a divorce suit and read a pertition in a divorce suit and speedily got himself badly tangled up in a confused maze of legal phrases. The judge undertook to set the young lawyer right, but the only result was to tangle him worse than ever. The judge was showing signs of losing his temper when Colonel Hendrick arose. "I hope, your honor," he said, in his courtly speaking voice, "that you will bear patiently with our young judge was showing with our y friend here. He is doing his best."

"I know that, Colonel Hendrick," said the judge, somewhat testily, "and I intend to bear patiently with him. I am merely trying to give Mr. So-and-So an idea."

"Your honor," said Colonel Hend-rick, "don't do it. He's got no place to put it."

Giant Statesmen,

Giant Statesmen,

Present and Past

'It is impossible to make a just comparison between senators of today and those who loom large in senate history. It is much like the attempt to measure modern lawyers against the legal giants of the past. We select a few great names and forget the abundant mediocrity. Two things are certain. One is that the problems with which senators must nowadays wrestle have not decreased in number or complexity. The other is that the senators to whom these problems are presented must divide their time between the task of solution and the political work essential to success if open primaries and in state-wide elections.

"The result is that senators are much more closely in touch with the life of their constituents shd more responsive to their will. Whether in the end this makes for better government and sounder statesmanship is a question which each citizen must answer according to his conviction. At present it is a purely academic guaswer according to his conviction. At present it is a purely academic ques-tion. The open primary and the state-wide election were necessary parts of the modern revolt against abused auwide election were necessary parts of the modern revolt against abused au-thority. It is too soon to affirm whether or not the change is salutary and permanent. However this may be, it is certain that the senate is no longer Mount Olympus, but it is also true that Pennsylvania avenue is a very different themselvers between very different thoroughfare from Main street."—Senator George Wharton

Gopher's Good Sense

Not so many summers are registered by time to the credit of Dorothy Jean Utley-but enough, it seems, to have provided opportunity for her to make some observations concerning the world in which she lives, remarks the St. Paul Dispatch. She is familiar with some strange ways of humans and has seen, too, how some other living things comport themselves. So this thirteen-year-old Bemidji girl, whose essay on, safety placed first in Minnesota competition, expresses the the automobile. Dorothy commends the gopher's good sense to the attention of pedestrians. "He stands erect, he sniffs the air, he also looks around." Mere people lack the judgment to do that, she has observed. Their conduct perhaps is more comparable to that of the turtle, which goes straight ahead, watches, selects and gives the news looking neither to right nor left, of all things for the betterment or and gets himself frequently squashed into the pavement.

Dorothy is wise in choosing the gopher rather than the rabbit, which dodges into the road like a small boy from behind a parked car and once in the brilliant beams of the headlights at night keeps to the road in front, fearful of plunging to safety in darkness walling the shafts of light.
